

WILSON OBVIOUS TO PARADE DANGERS

Rides to and From Capitol Unmindful of Strong Protection About Him.

NEWSPAPERMAN IS CLOSE

'Impressed With Fearlessness of 'First Lady' as She Accompanies Her Husband.

By FRANK R. LAMB.

One of the multitudinous arrangements made by The Times covering the inauguration was the obtaining from the Secret Service men in charge of the safety of the President, permission for me to become one of their number and accompany them from early morning until the ceremonies were over.

As a result of that arrangement I was the only representative of a local newspaper who was in that cordon of men, whom thousands saw surrounding the Presidential carriage on the way from the Capitol to the White House.

The President and Mrs. Wilson made the journey to the Capitol and back apparently untroubled by the army of protectors thrown about them.

Constantly Doffing Hat.
The President was constantly duff-ing his hat and smiling to the cheering crowds, while Mrs. Wilson sat serenely at his side, occasionally chatting with him and commenting on some feature of the trip that attracted her attention.

I can assure everybody that President Wilson had no fears of would-be assassins, but the spectacle of such an armed force would strike terror to the hearts of most women occupying the precarious position held by Mrs.
Wilson yesterday.

Guards stationed on the rooftops along the line of march, their badges and pistols flashing in the sunlight, rather caused the Chief Executive to smile at times. In one instance he called the attention of Senator Overman, who was riding in his carriage, to a guard sentry who was saluting against the sky with rifle ready for any emergency.

Chief Flynn in Charge.
Chief William J. Flynn, of the Secret Service, was in personal charge of the squad of his men comprising the immediate guard of the President. He walked directly behind the President's carriage, while Joseph Murphy, chief of the White House force of Secret Service men, and "Bill" Nye, a veteran in the service, walked immediately to the right of the President, both being within a few steps of him.

The Secret Service squad surrounding the carriage was the pick of the service, including Richard I. (Dick) Jervis, James (Jimmy) Sloan, Edward Starling, Miles McCall, John Henry, Patrick Ahern, John Q.
Adams, "Red" Bratton, Harry Barker, Charles Fredericks, and others from the different districts throughout the United States.

Each Man "Prepared."
Nearly every one of the operatives had their automatic revolvers gripped in their hands, which were shoved into the side pockets of their overcoats. Each man knew just what he would do in an emergency—so detailed were the preparations made by Chief Flynn and Murphy. Each had a particular part to play in the event of an attempt on the President's life.

Roofs, stands, windows, and the streets were scanned and every individual within their vision was scrutinized by this selected squad of trained guards, but not a single attempt was made nor was there a single attempt to approach the President's carriage.

Cavalry Hemmed Cordons.
Hemming in the cordon of Secret Service men surrounding the President and Mrs. Wilson was the Second Cavalry, the mounted men virtually making a wall around the Presidential party. Flanking the cavalrymen on either side were lines of some of the country's most elite detectives, who came from the largest cities to aid in the protection of the President.

Along the curb were hundreds of regular and special policemen, whose eyes were fixed on the crowds and windows, while outside the curb standing at attention with loaded rifles were the members of the Twelfth and Sixty-ninth Infantry of the New York National Guard.
Sprinkled in the crowds on the street and in the stands were hundreds of department of justice agents and special guards.

Never before were such precautions taken, but the President and Mrs.
Wilson seemed to be oblivious of the imposing protection that surrounded them.

The device would tend to balance the ship, and keep it from rocking in stormy seas, Mr. Galliger says.

CLASS OF '12 TO REUNITE

Georgetown Class Will Convene at University Club.
Justice Ashley M. Gould, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; Daniel W. Baker, former United States Attorney for the District, and Attorney Frank J. Hogan, will be the honor guests at the quadrennial reunion of the class of 1912 of the Law School of Georgetown University at the University Club this evening.

The reunion was planned for today in order that the large number of out-of-town visitors might be able to attend. A large number of the Georgetown men were enlisted with the troops who have been stationed at the border, including several of the 1912 class of the law school.

The committee in charge of the banquet is composed of: Paul B.
Cromelin, A. F. Meyer, R. H. Shale, Monie Sanger, John McLaughlin, Jack Alcala, Louis Korn, Hubert Quinter, Harry Gerrity, William E. Leahy, Arthur L. Lansdale, Frank L. Brown, Bernard L. Foy, J. C. Brown, Leo D. Loughran, J. Forrest Kelly, and J. W. Whitney.

—HAS ANTI-TORPEDO DEVICE Inventor Promises Merchantmen Immunity From Submarine Menace.
Bernard Galliger, of Lynn, Massachusetts, brought to the attention of the War Department today a device intended for the protection of merchant ships from submarines.

Mr. Galliger, an inventor, and a manufacturer, wishes to provide the merchant with long, heavy, protruding plates running along side the ship to prevent the projectile from injuring the vessel. Should a torpedo be fired at the ship, it would be reflected, he says, against the steel plate.

The device would tend to balance
the ship, and keep it from rocking
in stormy seas, Mr. Galliger says.
